Desert eyed as refuse refuge

By Lee Peterson

Southern California's garbage seems destined for a hot, dry grave.

Plans to export the region's refuse by railroad are becoming more attractive as dumping room dwindles at area landfills.

With the average Southland household churning out two tons of trash each year and the public's proven aversion to trash incineration, local public officials have turned to rail hauling as a solution to the solid waste problem.

Yet taking out the trash more than 200 miles to a desolate hole in the ground of the desert of either San Bernardino or Riverside counties doesn't rule out incineration or some other form of disposal.

There's just too much parbage.

In Los Angeles County, 72,000 tons of trash is dumped each day. The valley area of San Bernardino County adds another 5,700 tons.

"We're not promoting ourselves as the answer to all of the problem," said Jean Carr, marketing director for the Mine Reclamation Corp., a company proposing to use the old Kaiser Eagle Mountain mine as a landfill.

Firms seeking to establish the first stream of solid waste to a desert destination have been courting solid waste managers and lining up the necessary permits and agreements.

Their asking prices range from $40 to $50 per ton. Local landfill fees are climbing, but still hover around $12 a ton. Rail hauling companies note that with land running out in landfills, the price differences will diminish significantly.

San Bernardino County's solid waste managers are not ready to commit to a rail hauling plan, but the San Gabriel Valley Association of cities has narrowed their choices down to two firms, Mine Reclamation and Waste Management of North America.

The Eagle Mountain site in Riverside County can handle up to 16,000 tons every day, when operating at full capacity. Waste Management's plan, to Waste Management's plan, to create a dump halfway between the small towns of Amboy and Cadiz in San Bernardino County's high desert, is seeking to export 6,000 tons a day.

But Hal Cahill, the firm's technical services director, claimed that the plan can be expanded by 3,000 tons daily with each transfer station built.

A rail hauling transfer station is where the garbage trucks would bring the residential and commercial refuse. Before squeezing it and loading it into sealed train containers, recyclables and hazardous waste

A taste of country in the city

By Lisa Van Proyen

Pull on some jeans, put on your boots and — partner or not — mosey on down to a country western night club and have yerself a hoedown.

You won't have to travel out to the boondocks to find a country club suited to your tastes, either. A number of 'em are settled here in the local area, depending on the type of atmosphere you're lookin' for.

The Western Connection in San Dimas offers a modern approach to the country life, with a 2,300 square-foot dance floor.

"'I've always wanted a place, but I never thought it would be this big," said Fred Scuncio, 39, owner of the club. "I love the people. It's so much fun to watch them out there dancing."

"I think it's great. It's one of the finer clubs that has opened up on the West coast," said Duke Davis, a player in one of the bands at the club.

The large dance club can be seen from the 210 freeway with its large red, flashy sign. Inside, that flash all-American red, white and blue lights.

The Western Connection is open from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. Fridays and Saturdays, and from 6 p.m. to midnight during

The cover charge for the entertainment is $2, except Friday and Saturdays before 8

While the Mine Reclamation people have agreed to pay the county of Riverside $5 per ton dumped at Eagle Mountain, the Waste Management firm has yet to approach San Bernardino County with a similar proposal.

Both firms claim to have 100 years worth of capacity. The Kaiser site is an open trench two miles long, a half mile wide and 1,500 feet deep.

Entrepreneurs interested in running trash out of town on a rail are prepared to separate out recyclables from the stream of waste at the transfer station. However, firms would like to serve communities with curbside recycling, where homeowners do the separation.

The San Gabriel Valley Association of Cities asked firms to submit proposals for 20year contracts.

Rail hauling of solid waste — all area solid waste — is part of the area's air quality officials' plan to clear the skies.

Course-side condos receive green light

By Kathy Betts

Unless the move is found to be illegal, the new developer of south Upland Hills Country Club estates will be building 186 more 1- and 2-story condominiums units along the golf course.

In a 5-1 vote recently, Upland Planning Commissioners granted a conditional use permit for Barratt development company to build the estimated $200,000 units.

Six units will cover an open space area in the development's southeast corner, which several people alleged to be guaranteed for a passive park under a 1985 contract.

Rancho Cucamonga homeowners and residents in north Upland Hills Country Club estates opposed construction of the nearby six units, because they said a city-approved contract with Prestige Homes, the prior developer, ensured that the area be green.

Before approving a permit for the builder, Planning Commissioners directed the deputy city attorney to investigate the legality of building on the area.

After the meeting Glen Worthington, Barratt's director of planning and engineering, insisted that the residents who opposed the area's development would have no access to the park area anyway. Richard Gagnon, the secretary/treasurer of Upland Hills homeowners' association south, said he believed otherwise.

Commissioner William Daily said he believed that the contract spoken of was really a Conditional Use Permit (CUP) that could be altered with another such permit.

After the vote, an unidentified man and woman, sitting among an estimated 30 residents who attended the meeting to question the development, did so out loud. "It was a resolution, not a CUP, you jerk," the man said after Daily's vote.

"I think that is disgusting," said the woman after the commission's vote.

Gagnon said association representatives had met during the last month with the developer to iron out their differences agreement. "We got predominantly what we wanted," he said.

Decisions that equated to compromises between both sides included:

 Roofing — metal as those in the development's north end instead of the proposed concrete tile which doesn't hold up to golf ball abuse;

• One- and two-story units — each type comprising 50 percent of the total 274-unit development. One-story units could not include those with lofts, said Planning Director Jeff Bloom, who cited the Uniform Building Code.

Commissioner Eldon McColl believed the Tanglewood entrance was needed to ensure safety, ie. emergency access, into the development.

Eldon didn't understand why the new developer wanted to change the roof material and the units' colors from chocolate brown to lighter tints. His questions brought hushed cheers from audience members, although the developer was permitted to change to the lighter tints above 16th Street.

McColl labeled the concern over the legality of taking away the open space "a point of no return."

"I think we've reached the point of no return, because of the contract on open space or the non-contract on open space," he said. "If there is a contract on open space, there probably is a contract on the entryway."

Confusion over who would landscape and maintain an entryway into the homes was resolved when Worthington said Barratt would supply the plants because the homeowners' association agreed to care for it.

"I started coming here before I worked here and I brought my children," said Esther Elliot, a receptionist at the club.

"All the regulars in here are more like a family than anything else," said club employee Mike Mitchell. "Every week the family grows. I've had people come in here and say they really feel comfortable."

"I see some (people) in a rock 'n' roll bar, and the next week, you'll see 'em in here with cowboy boots and hats — and they have never seen a horse," said Sam Hopper, who regularly comes to the club.

As you walk in the doors to the Mule Lip Saloon, you're greeted with a back-country setting — a red barn with a rice bag dangling from the roof, an ol' western wood wagon, glittering orange lights with a moveable stuffed chicken hanging on a line above the dance floor.

Horse shoes, bullet belts, canteens and grain bags are some other remnants of the western era.

The high-standing tables with stools offer a clear view of the nightly entertainment, but watch out for that one table off to the side — the one that has a built-in light on the top with the notation: "Lookin' for a partner? If you're standin' around this table you can't refuse to dance."

On the other side of the club is a Kiddie Bar, which offers childrens' drinks.

Friday and Saturday nights feature steak, lobster and a salad bar inside the Upper Lip Restaurant. "Beer and buns (hot dogs) night" is every Wednesday for 50 cents:

Sunday nights are for the family with dance lessons at 6:45 and 8 p.m. After the two-step, and line of dancing, a pinata is strung for the childrens' delight.

"I've been to a lot of the other night clubs and none of them have the atmosphere that we have here," Mitchell said. "Every regular here likes to see the kids in here."

If you wanna be a star on the stage, then The California

"We make just about everyone a star," Eiffert said. "They get up on the stage and sing. Everybody down deep has dreamed about being a star, but here it's so relaxing. There's something 'bout getting the microphone and just doin' it."

Altruistic '60s-style youth movements enjoying a comeback of sorts

"I have a friend who believes that if we don't take care of the ozone problem in the next seven years we won't have to worry about it at all." says Jim Coppola, above.

By Sarah E. Crowley

The idea of clubs formed for the promotion of world peace suggests something left over from the 1960s for many of us.

Say the word "peace" these days and visions of ratty longhaired students shouting "hell no, we won't go" recall those not-so-long-ago, anti-war days.

Well, time passes and political outlooks change. Or do they?

True, instead of the Age of Aquarius we're living in the materialistic, more conservative 1980s. But while the image of peace organizations still remains a stereotype, such clubs are gaining popularity among young people across the country.

And instead of shouting in the streets, youthful members are pursuing more constructive means in their efforts to achieve the dream of world peace.

According to Charles Tryon. the most highly respected of peace groups is UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund Founded in 1946 to help European children after World War II, the organization involves young people in projects ranging from fund-raising to participation in the Model United Nations

Tryon, former president of the Pomona Valley chapter, said that delegates from the Claremont Colleges attend the West Coast version of these mock U.N. meetings on funds raised from UNICEF greeting card sales.

While UNICEF is the best known groups, more obscure and much more recent clubs are also springing up, such as the one started by Mary Anne Patterson.

A member of the Friends Quakers-Meeting of Claremont, Patterson organized a few , youngsters this year because "it seemed to me that we needed something more for kids.

'One of the most devastating things about kids today is that there's not a lot of hope about the future. Whether they're talking about nuclear war or social problems, the future is pretty glum. They can't say with much certainty that their lives will be better than their parents', either environmentally or in

She stressed that working toward a better world" meant focusing on individual responsibility, the belief that individuals do have the power to make a difference.

"Children are the future. If we become friends now, I believe we'll have a peaceful future,' said Meredith Whitlock

The Mount San Antonio sophomore and her friend, Jennifer King of Claremont, belong to Peace Child Foundation. Headquartered in Fairfax, Va., the organization promotes national and international productions of the play, "Peace Child."

Consultant will help R.C. spend housing funds wisely

By Michael Mahi

Rancho Cucamonga officials need some direction when it comes to spending redevelopment money for affordable housing.

So the city plans to hire a consultant in September to determine the city's housing needs through the year 2010. Before changes in state law and a settled local lawsuit, the city was spending its redevelopment money specifically designated for lowincome housing on flood control and street improvement projects.

City Manager Jack Lam said the city no longer uses redevelopment "set-aside" funds for flood control or street projects. Lam said before the new state law went into effect in January, the city's interpretation of the redevelopment law was less strict.

"The new law is more narrow," Lam said. "There are only certain things the money can be spent on and we will be looking at

Cities want new radios

By Kathy Betts

Chief administrators in five western San Bernardino County cities agreed recently that they want a $9 million radio communication system to serve solely the county's west end.

However, elected officials in Ontario, Montclair, Chino, Upland and Rancho Cucamonga this month will make the final decision on whether to break away from the county's proposed $13 billion communication project.

"The west end can build a (system) of their own for about the same cost as it would be to lease the county's (proposed) system for one year," said Ontario Fire Chief David Lee.

The county had proposed charging each city using its system $61.05 per month for each transmitter hooked up to it. Montclair, the west end's least populated city, has 139 transmitters alone.

Lee, who is leading the west valley effort to obtain a separate communication system, hired a county consultant to identify the cost for the west end to build, operate and maintain its own system.

Gene Buzzi, the consultant from Florida-based Omnicom, presented those figures during a 3½-hour meeting last week with the cities' government, fire, police and water district personnel.

Instead of the $61.05 user fee, the system would cost the five cities $5 to $7 for each

Don't look for newest Lotto here

By Rebecca Pavitt Raney

First it was self-serve banking, and then it was selfserve gas. But the California Lottery isn't about to be outdone.

So voila! Now it's self-serve gambling.

But not in San Bernardino County. And not in eastern Los Angeles County, either.

Those nifty new dollar-eating Lotto terminals won't be making it this close to the desert any time in the next year, in fact.

Lottery officials said they want to put their 750 terminals into the most heavily populated areas of Orange County and Los Angeles. Many stores there don't sell Lotto tickets because the clerks are too busy.

The green machines are also supposed to attract customers who otherwise wouldn't have bought Lotto tickets.

High-income housing, often found near water or hillsides, also is hard to find, city officials

However, they believe they may have to supply more of both housing types to meet new state requirements.

Planning commissioners recently studied a draft report of Montclair's current housing stock and spotted an estimated 184 acres — 62 acres incorporated and 121 acres unincorporated land — for future housing.

Beginning this year and continuing to 1992, all 508 cities and counties in California are required by law to update their housing elements in their general plans. Montclair's housing element was last devised and adopted in 1984.

"We're growing all the time. We have eight different tours in the Soviet Union, four in the U.S., one in Ireland and one in Japan this summer," said tour associate John Stevens.

In a telephone interview, Stevens said that peace clubs have always existed but "nobody really knew about them. They're coming to the forefront now. The social climate is right now and Gorbachev has done an incredible amount to help this."

King, a Claremont High School junior, said the challenge of the play is "to imagine how to transform today's imperfect world into a future peaceful world."

The 16-year-old performed in a 1986 Claremont version and the following year traveled to the Soviet Union with a "Peace Child" company. She believes fear of the future is one reason peace clubs are more popular.

"Fear of nuclear war is tremendous. You'd be surprised at how many little kids actually have nightmares about it," she said.

"When I was 11 I thought the world was going to end before I was 20. That's all I heard on the news and it scared me. But now that I'm 20, I think maybe not," recalled Tara Koss.

As president of the Chaffey College chapter of Amnesty International, Koss has put her fears to a more constructive use.

Under the guidance of adviser Maura O'Neill, Koss and her associates in the 20-member club write letters and circulate petitions in an effort, said member Dennis Callaci, "to raise consciousness toward human rights in the community."

"There's a lot of apathy in this country, a feeling that somebody else will do it for me," he said. "But on the one-to-one individual level, we can make a difference. That's why I'm involved."

Amnesty International is a worldwide movement dedicated to the release of political prisoners.

Reopening of Highland eyed

Rancho Cucamonga is hoping to right a wrong turn

The city's Planning Commission last week endorsed a resolution to amend the city's general plan and allow the reopening of Highland Avenue.

Removing the tons of dirt the city dumped on Highland in January is something residents living in homes near 19th Street have been fighting for since the road was closed.

When the city closed Highland it re-routed the traffic onto 19th Street, which was a deadend

City Engineer Russ Maguire said Highland, which doubles as state Highway 30, was closed in January because it is in the right-of-way of the planned Foothill Freeway.

The city's general plan calls for the closing of Highland between Haven Avenue and the Deer Creek reservior to make way for the proposed freeway.

Maguire said the city expects to get permission from Caltrans to begin the road work within a few weeks. He said the road project could cost $300,000.
